ROCKY MOUNTAIN HARDWARE

The smallest details often make the most memorable interiors. With the expansion of the Phases Collection, Rocky Mountain Hardware and Suede Studio continue their exploration of sculptural hardware, introducing the Bliss lever and Dilemma cabinet knob. Jennifer Hoey, principal designer of Suede Studio, shares more on the additions. rockymountainhardware.com; suedestudio.com

What inspired this expansion? When we launched Phases, we envisioned a collection of bath and kitchen accessories that felt versatile—functional, beautiful and designed for daily life. As we began specifying it in residential projects, we found ourselves wanting to carry that same design language onto doors and cabinetry. Our newest additions are a direct response, allowing for greater continuity throughout the home.

The collection balances curves with geometry. What draws you to that interplay? I've always been interested in challenging the visual weight of bronze through refined proportions. Curves introduce movement and softness, while geometry provides structure and architectural clarity. That tension reflects our broader design philosophy, balancing warmth with strength and contemporary sensibilities with timeless appeal.

What role does architectural hardware play in shaping a home? Hardware is among the most tactile elements of a space. It's encountered countless times throughout the day, quietly influencing how a home feels. When thoughtfully designed, it creates continuity and elevates everyday rituals through touch, materiality and detail.

ALFREDO PAREDES X KRAVET COUTURE

Inspired by decades of travel and landscapes shaped by sun, sea and history, the Cocuyo Collection by Alfredo Paredes for Kravet Couture is a study in understated luxury. "Cocuyo comes from my Cuban roots and growing up in Miami, where color and light are everywhere," the New York-based designer says, pointing to the palette of sun-bleached tones and warm clays. The collection includes plush chenilles and bouclés, artisanal weaves and hand-dyed textiles—all tactile fabrics that feel at home in the Rockies region, where Paredes is currently completing a series of projects. "Texture makes a room feel inhabited rather than decorated," he notes. And Cocuyo, under his eye, is defined by an appreciation for the art of living well. kravet.com; alfredoparedesstudio.com

ROWLAND+BROUGHTON X NASONMORETTI

Under founding principals John Rowland and Sarah Broughton, Colorado design studio Rowland+Broughton has teamed up with storied Murano glassmaker NasonMoretti to create the Alpine Meadow Collection. This dialogue between architecture, artistry and place renders the grandeur of Colorado's landscape into a series of mouth-blown glassware vessels, each produced in small batches and meticulously hand-finished. "Every piece in the collection is drawn directly from the forms and textures of the high-alpine environment surrounding Aspen," Broughton says, pointing to the landscapes's springtime wildflowers, glacial lakes, snowcapped peaks and more. "Architecture is not limited to buildings," Rowland adds. "It extends into daily rituals. Alpine Meadow is a direct expression of that belief, translating nature's craft into objects for everyday use." rowlandbroughton.com; nasonmoretti.com
