

8 all that and a magazine rack

A singular materials palette—including flamed-black-granite floor tiles throughout and room-by-room appearances of reclaimed oak—connects this master-suite bathroom to the sleek, modern Aspen home to which it belongs. Slabs of silver travertine dress the walls of the bath and form the countertop on a custom reclaimed-oak, wall-hung vanity. “All fittings—the faucet, sink, etc.—are Boffi,” designer Sarah Broughton says. “We treat lighting architecturally; it is not meant to be decorative, and here it is incorporated into the design of the mirror.” Behind the vanity, walls swathed in 6-by-12-inch white tiles enclose a water closet (complete with built-in magazine rack). Elsewhere in the room, a custom stainless steel tub by Diamond Spas (not shown) invites soaking, while a frosted window provides privacy but allows light to stream into the ground-floor room. “The room is really beautiful and soothing,” Broughton says. “The whole house is modern and clean, but warm.” ❖
