

MOUNTAIN LIVING[®]

— 25 YEARS —

SUMMERTIME

LAKE TAHOE LIVING
TELLURIDE ADVENTURES
DREAMY BUNK ROOMS
ASPEN'S ICONIC HOTEL

THE HISTORIC HOTEL JEROME EXPANDS ITS OFFERINGS BY PURCHASING ITS NEXT-DOOR NEIGHBOR, THE ASPEN TIMES BUILDING

CHANGING WITH THE TIMES

STORY DARLA WORDEN PHOTOS SHAWN O'CONNOR

ARCHITECTURE ROWLAND + BROUGHTON

INTERIOR DESIGN TAL STUDIO LANDSCAPE ARCHITECTURE DESIGN WORKSHOP

Aquiring the neighboring Aspen Times building allowed the Hotel Jerome to create a lovely courtyard for guests and the community.

Since 1889, the Hotel Jerome, Aspen’s crown jewel, has occupied a corner of Main Street as the town evolved from mining mecca to world-class ski resort to Hollywood’s playground. And as the hotel’s guests have changed from silver barons to media moguls, so have their needs; a handsomely appointed hotel room that once fulfilled traveler expectations may not always meet today’s square-footage and amenity requests.

To provide roomy luxury suites with additional hotel amenities, the Hotel Jerome management bought a neighboring property that was formerly home to the Aspen Times printing facility. They hired the creative team behind the Jerome’s 2012 redesign—Aspen-based architecture firm Rowland + Broughton, landscape architects Design Workshop and interior designer TAL Studio—to reimagine the 1,423-square-foot structure, winning unanimous approval from the Aspen City Council.

Rowland + Broughton was tasked with blending two visually opposed historic buildings—the landmark Hotel Jerome with its stately brick façade and the 1904 Times building—as well as designing a three-story addition. >>

LEFT: An invitation to relax—the revamped swimming pool area has been expanded to include two additional hot tubs. RIGHT: Bad Harriet was designed with contemporary elements that create a supremely comfortable and intimate hideaway.

“Our goal was to preserve, enhance and highlight the integrity of this now unique wooden storefront building while integrating an addition that did not overpower or take away from the more informal quality of the Aspen Times building,” says Rowland + Broughton Principal Sarah Broughton. One of the biggest challenges was removing the Times building from the site and then installing a foundation and steel superstructure to allow it to once again stand on its own, explains Broughton: “It was a surgical and high-structural achievement.” The result of their efforts is a rustic modern building that flows into the enhanced courtyard/community space.

Bad Harriet, a sassy new speakeasy located in the building’s basement, is named after the wife of original owner Jerome B. Wheeler. The underground bar is punctuated with well-edited contemporary design elements and complements the hotel’s legendary J-Bar—where Hunter S. Thompson once held court.

The new three-story structure behind the Times building includes two 2,000-square-foot, three-bedroom, three-bathroom residential-style suites—each located >> on a private floor with balcony views facing Aspen “Ajax” Mountain. Todd-Avery Lenahan, principal of TAL Studio, oversaw the interior design, working to create a seamless extension of the Jerome experience. “For the suites, we explored the idea of design palettes that were more seasonally specific and visually celebrated each of the four distinct seasons that are enjoyed in Aspen,” Lenahan says.

BELOW, LEFT: Rowland + Broughton worked to preserve, enhance and highlight the integrity of this now unique wooden storefront building. BELOW, RIGHT: The view of Aspen “Ajax” Mountain from a bedroom in the new luxury suites.

ABOVE: The new conference space, the Dunaway Room, seats up to 60 people and opens onto the new courtyard.
BELOW: The outdoor space connecting the two buildings provides the perfect setting for intimate events and gatherings.

A new 734-square-foot meeting space was constructed on the ground level of the Times building and called the Dunaway Room after Bil Dunaway, who bought the Aspen Times in 1956. The space, holding up to 60 people, opens onto the newly revamped courtyard.

Outside, the courtyard, swimming pool and terrace invite guests to relax and enjoy the new surroundings. The garden between the Aspen Times building and hotel is open to visitors and hotel guests as they stroll in and out of the landscaped square accessible from Main Street.

Tony DiLucia, general manager of the Hotel Jerome for a span of 30 years, is delighted with the expansion. “Seeing the hotel serve as the setting for countless milestones for generations of families is incredibly heartwarming,” he says. “Our new spaces are a welcomed and exciting addition to the place we all hold so dear.” ○

ABOVE, LEFT: The new 2,000-square-foot suites were designed to create a seamless extension of the Jerome experience, celebrating the four seasons enjoyed in Aspen. ABOVE, RIGHT: Bad Harriet provides a sophisticated addition to Aspen’s nightlife. It honors women from the past and present with craft cocktails named after trailblazing women.